As we move into fall, it's time to start thinking about year-end planning. No, we don't mean planning the menu for your New Year's Eve celebration! What we do mean is reviewing your portfolio and personal situation and considering strategies that can reduce your 2016 tax bill.

In addition, many of the changes proposed in Justin Trudeau's first federal budget are slated to come into effect in 2017. It's worthwhile revisiting your financial plan to ensure it's on-side with any new legislation.

U.S. Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen recently touted the strength of the U.S. economy, saying it had "made tremendous progress in recovering from the financial crisis." Yellen also noted that the labour market is nearing maximum employment, with an enviable unemployment rate of just 5%.<sup>1</sup>

Thanks to low oil prices, inflation is still moderate and interest rates remain accommodative, which is allowing consumers to spend — all positive factors for investors.

Why buy U.S.?

With about two-thirds of the Canadian market devoted to the financial and resource sectors, our market lacks the diversification of the United States.

By sticking too close to home, Canadian investors may miss out on opportunities in sectors better represented south of the border — such as information technology, health care, and consumer products. In addition, many companies in these innovative sectors do a great deal of their business in foreign markets, which provides Canadians with international exposure.

Easy and convenient

With ready access to stocks listed on the S&P 500, NASDAQ, and other U.S.

exchanges, it's easy and convenient to add U.S. exposure to a Canadian portfolio.

We can help you review appropriate choices for your portfolio. ■

Fast tips for slow economic growth

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) recently warned about persistently slow economic growth, citing an unfavourable global environment, weak commodity prices, and the strong U.S. dollar. The IMF also referred to China's shift from a manufacturing and investment-driven economy to one based on services and consumption.

What are the key factors driving these trends and what do they mean for mutual fund investors? Let's take a look...

Rise of the Chinese consumer

China's economic boom of the past few decades was driven by investing heavily in factories and infrastructure and then exporting manufactured goods to the rest of the world. Now, China is embarking on an economic rebalancing designed to encourage Chinese consumers to spend more.

The rebalancing efforts are expected to see Gross Domestic Product levels slow to the 5% to 6% range, after explosive growth of 8% to 10% in the boom years.<sup>1</sup>

Boomers spending less

In Canada and the United States, baby boomers are expected to cut back their spending as they move into their retirement years. The boomers are the biggest demographic group in Canada's history, and as they exit the workforce in the years ahead, the labour force and the economy will slow.<sup>2</sup>

The good news

While slowing growth becomes the norm, new opportunities are emerging for mutual fund investors:

Technology funds. Innovation will be a heavy hitter in a slow-growth world. As businesses cut expenses in response to slower growth, companies are looking to technology solutions to give them a competitive advantage.

Today's technology mutual funds are more than just hardware and software. Cloud computing, mobile technology, and social media are also part of the technology universe. And unlike their speculative dot-com predecessors, many of today's tech companies are grounded by strong fundamentals.

Emerging market funds. Emerging markets will slow along with China in the coming years. But they are still expected to grow at a clip of more than 4% in the near term.<sup>1</sup> That's more than double the projected rate of growth of developed nations like Canada and the United Kingdom.

Funds that tap into the global consumer.

Emerging market consumers are younger than their North American and European counterparts and more likely to spend on the latest consumer goods. Plus, as their earnings rise, they will have more disposable income. As consumer demand in emerging markets rises, consumer discretionary funds may benefit.

Broad-based U.S. mutual funds. Many of the largest U.S. companies now do a significant part of their business abroad and are keenly focused on emerging markets. Large, diversified U.S. funds can provide Canadian investors with an extra level of diversification — and help them tap into emerging opportunities.

Health care funds. Aging populations will become larger consumers of health care-related products. Today's diversified health care funds include pharmaceuticals, biotechnology, managed care companies, and makers of medical equipment.

Dividend funds. Persistently low interest rates mean that investors looking for yield are turning to dividend funds to generate some of the income they need — especially in an environment where interest rates are expected to stay low.

A big part of our role as your advisor is to stay on top of economic developments that could affect your portfolio. We will review appropriate funds for your portfolio with a goal of positioning you for the new normal. ■

INVESTING

Advice creates value — for your savings and for the economy

Navigating the choppy markets we've seen over the past few years can test even the most seasoned investor's commitment. This kind of market climate shows the real value of advice and professionally managed mutual funds. Recent research backs this up:

- 84% of mutual fund investors say that they are satisfied or very satisfied with the advice provided by their advisors.<sup>1</sup>
- 92% of investors say they have earned more from their investments by working with an advisor.<sup>2</sup>

It's not just individual savings' rates that increase. Advice delivers benefits to individuals, families — and even the economy. In fact, if an additional 10% of Canadians worked with an advisor, household wealth would increase by $4.8 billion and the Canadian economy would grow by an additional $2.3 billion over the next 45 years.<sup>3</sup>

Whether investors start small or large, the benefits of advice accrue to all. About a quarter of mutual fund investors had less than $5,000 in financial assets when they started working with an advisor, and more than half had less than $25,000.<sup>1</sup> ■

EYEOPENER

Democrat or Republican: Which is better for investors and the economy?

During every presidential election, the question invariably arises: Which party is better for the economy — Democrats or Republicans? To find out, two Princeton researchers analyzed a 64-year period beginning with President Harry Truman in 1945 and ending with President Obama.<sup>1</sup> Here's what they found:

Party in power	Democrats	Republicans
Average annual gain in S&P 500 Index	8.35%	2.7%
Average annual GDP growth	4.35%	2.54%
Total rise/fall in unemployment	- 0.80%	+ 1.10%
Total number of quarters of recession	8	49

INVESTMENT STRATEGY

Shares on a downtick? Let's take a closer look

Large, single-day losses can be dramatic — and often headline-grabbing — but they are not necessarily signs of a bad investment.

Context matters

Stock prices move up and down in response to a variety of influences, which, on their own, are not necessarily cause for panic. The market is simply adjusting the price of the company's stock because, at the moment, there are more sellers than buyers.

The upside of a downtick

A downtick is an opportune time for us to review the stock based on the criteria that prompted buying it in the first place: its fundamentals, future prospects, and appropriateness for your portfolio.

If we determine that the stock is still meeting your needs, it may be worthwhile to add more. And if it no longer meets your needs, then yes, it could be time to sell.

If you are concerned about a sudden change in an investment's value, we would be pleased to help you gauge whether it represents a potential buy or sell opportunity. ■

INVESTING STRATEGY

Defensive investing — is it right for you?

A "defensive" investment, or "non-cyclical", is one that generally remains stable throughout all phases of the business cycle. Typically, they outperform the market during recessions but lag market leaders during economic expansion.

Defensive sectors

There are four economic sectors commonly identified as defensive:

Utilities. Because water, gas, and electricity are used at all times by everyone — consumers, businesses, government.

Consumer staples. Since we all need to do the laundry, brush our teeth, and buy staples, regardless of the economy.

Health Care. Medical goods and services are always in demand. In fact, demand has been growing in recent years with an aging population.

Telecom. For decades consumers have treated Internet and wireless technology as staples.

3 reasons to go defensive

Defensive investments offer some distinct benefits, including these three.

1. Protection from market cycles.

Holding equity investments in defensive sectors can help cushion your portfolio when the economy is in a recession. Revenues of companies in defensive sectors typically depend very little, and sometimes not at all, on the health of the economy. Long-term buy-and-hold investors maintain these holdings to help provide downside protection during market slides, with no need to try to time the market. More aggressive investors may temporarily add defensive holdings at appropriate times during the market cycle.

2. Potential outperformance.

Traditionally, defensive investments reduce overall risk, but past performance shows that they can also provide enhanced returns. Example: for the first quarter of 2016, utilities and consumer staples led the U.S. market, and for the past five years, one or more defensive sectors have finished in the top three.<sup>1</sup>

3. Enhanced stability. In volatile markets, non-cyclicals can help bring a measure of stability to your investment program.

Please contact us if you want to discuss the defensive component in your portfolio. ■
